News Clipped From Our Exchanges

The first glass tumbler used in England was made for Abbot Benedict in A. D. 600.
It is estimated that American insects eat up $700,000,000 worth of property annually.

There is a religious meaning to the white cross on the red field of the Swiss flag. It was adopted as an appeal to heaven in 1333, when the Swiss fought and won one of their greatest battles.

A number of owners of property in the business district of Modesto met with the city trustees Wednesday evening to discuss the street improvements proposition. No definite action was taken, and no definite decision reached other than that asphaltum would be too expensive at present, and that macadam will be the street covering used.

It developed during the course of the discussion that eight cents per square foot is what the maximum cost will be for the laying of a six-inch coat of macadam, making the cost to a man who has a frontage of one lot, or 25 feet, $56, approximately. This, in itself is not so bad, out where the rub seemed to be was with the owners who owned property which fronts two streets—a corner property. Here is not only two frontages, square with the face of the buildings, but the square of the street intersection, which must be dealt with. The impression that the men who owned the four corner frontages would have to pay for paving this square prevailed, each man to pave one fourth of the square. In some cases this square is larger than the actual frontage of the buildings on the corners.

The Grand Jury met in San Andreas this week and received the report of J. W. Cavis, the expert who has been at work on the county books for the past four or five months. The report, consisting of 101 pages, showed the county was indebted to two county officers to the amount of about $36. Expert Cavis also presented his bill, amounting to $1472.50.

He gave the grand jury some good advice, (also included in the above bill), as to how improvements could be made in the conduct of the various county offices, so that the services of an expert would not be needed in the future.

The grand jury also recommended the adoption of some needed sanitary and fire protection for the county hospital, after which they adjourned.—Angels Record.

The Dreamstone.

By Emma P. Wallace.

We were very happy—Esther and I. In ten years of married life, our portion had been health, peace and fair competence. In summer-time our cottage home was a bower of fragrant beauty, and in winter the trysting place of warmth and good cheer.

Then there was Phyllis, our only daughter. The artist pictured her as gazing dreamily into the future, with the little dimpled left hand holding her filmy robe against her right shoulder, her only ornament being a peculiar bracelet with a large ruby gleaming from its dull, gold setting.

It was a conceit of Esther's to have her taken thus, to show the soft round neck and arms, out Phyllis herself had cried for the ruby bracelet. The ornament always held a curious fascination for her. When all else failed to amuse her, she would tease for it, and sit in the sunshine turning it round and round, so that the light would sparkle and scintillate from its many facets. Then she would laugh with glee at the warmth and beauty of its radiance.

"See, mamma," she cried one day, "my ruby is happy; it laughs when I laugh, and when I think sad things about poor little hungry children, it grows dull and does not shine. Let me wear it on my arm, mamma, just for a little while; I want to watch it think."

"I am afraid you will break the bracelet, Phyllis," her mother answered, tenderly smoothing the tangled curls.

"I will be very careful, mamma; I play it is a dreamstone, and we have such good times together. Please, mamma, dear!"

"I would not allow it," I interrupted sharply, looking up from my newspaper.

Esther laughed. "It is only a childish fancy," she pleaded. "What possible harm can it do her?" and, kissing her little maiden, she adjusted the bracelet to the tiny arm.

Phyllis ran happily out to her play. Soon there was a sob from the direction of the doorway. We both turned to see a disconsolate little figure awaiting our notice.

"I have broken the bracelet, mamma," she said in an awe struck whisper. "I was climbing the garden wall to reach a beautiful tea rose for you when I slipped, and, see, mamma, the dreamstone is sorry, too, for all the glow has gone."

I took the trinket in my hand. Sure enough, its fiery radiance had vanished, and it seemed to me that the jewel sent a baleful gleam. It was not injured, only loosened in its setting.

"We will put this away, Esther," I announced firmly. "If Phyllis cares for this bauble, she may have it on her eighteenth birthday, but for the present I shall lock it up." Time flies, and before Esther and I could well realize it Phyllis had grown into a tall, slender girl, with a face for which men die and dare.

It was with anxiety that her mother and I watched the growing attachment of Phyllis and Dr. Tom Stamford. They had been playmates since they were children. We had no personal objection to him, only I wanted the young man to show his mental before we gave him our darling. Besides, Phyllis was too young—altogether too young. Her eighteenth birthday was still a week distant.

We were planning a ball in honor of the event, and she was bubbling over with girlish enthusiasm.

"Papa," she said one night, coming up to me in her sweet, coaxing way, "do you wish me to tell you what I want for my birthday present?"

"What is it, you minx?" I asked, pinching her cheek and dreading lest it be something in connection with Dr. Tom.

"Just this, popsey, that you redeem your promise and restore to me the ruby bracelet." I brought out the little box and, together, we examined its contents. I felt the old feeling of repugnance arise at the sight of the jewel. Phyllis went into ecstasies.

"Well take it," I said, not very graciously, "but the ruby is loose. You must have the bracelet repaired. Better take it to Oberly. He's a queer old duffer, but knows his business as well as nowaday."

In the hearty hug and kiss, which were my thanks, I was somewhat mollified, but the feeling of uneasiness remained. A couple of days later my watch stopped, and I dropped into Oberly's to leave it for repairs. The old man was white and bent, and he looked at me curiously.

"Where did you get that ruby," he asked abruptly.

I was accustomed to his eccentricities, and briefly told him what little I knew of its history.

"It is a dreamstone," he said slowly.

I started. "A what?"

"A dreamstone—one of the priceless message gems of remote ages. For so many centuries it has been used as a medium of communication that its accumulated power is almost beyond belief. I, myself, feel—"

"And the message?" I asked eagerly.

"I had all but completed my interpretation of the stone, when I took the jewel to the window to more accurately catch the refraction of the light from its superior facets. Accidentally I pressed a tiny, hidden spring in one of the grape clusters. That cluster proved to be hollow, and a tiny bit of parchment rolled out. By means of a powerful lens I deciphered the mysterious words—the message of the dreamstone:

"This Dreamstone of Fate The Prince of Dreams to Phyllis. The Gladstone, the Echoing Call of the Waters, Down through the Falls of the Ages. Down to the soul of the Maiden."

"The date and language of the parchment are those of centuries back, and how far the message of the ruby antedates this translation is uncertain. The cutting of the stone is Phoenician. The name 'Phyllis' is probably just a coincidence. But may I ask whether you have ever noticed that the stone has any effect upon your daughter?"

"Nothing more than she has always admired it, and used to fancy that it reflected her own moods. Strange; she christened it the dreamstone years ago."

"The duce she did," Oberly ejaculated, straightening up. "I don't like the message. If that jewel were mine I'd charter a ship and drop it in mid-ocean."

"I have promised that she should wear it once. After that I shall take care of the uncanny thing myself."

"The night of the ball came, and when my daughter stood before me, there was an indescribable change in her. I missed the sparkle from her eye, and in its place was the old-time, dreamy expression of the miniature. Instinctively I looked at the ruby. It glowed like a heart of fire.

"The guests came, and with them Dr. Tom. It was only too evident that, for him, the world held only one girl—and that was Phyllis. They were a handsome couple as they glided around to the rhythmic time of the hidden orchestra, and many an eye followed with admiring glances. They paused by a french window, and, in apparent response to a suggestion from him, they passed out upon the lawn. Esther followed them with a troubled look, and an undefined fear seized me. I walked to an open door. In the moonlight I could see my darling leaning on the wooden railing of the river embankment, which footed our grounds. Even as I looked I saw the railing give way—saw a flash of white, and heard a shrill, girlish scream, then a splash—and after that it is all confusion in my memory—a dream of horror.

I remember they brought the dripping, white form into the ball-room, where now was the silence of death. I remember Dr. Tom worked over her, with the water streaming from hair and evening dress—worked with set jaw and grim determination.

"The work of that accursed ruby," I groaned, and, glancing at the bare, white arm, I saw that it was gone.

"She will live!" I shouted excitedly. "This curse is gone. Open your eyes, sweet. Come back to us. Come, little one, come." I entreated. They thought the shock had turned my brain; but there was an expectant pause, in which even Dr. Tom half joined. Thank heaven, there was a fluttering sigh, a quiver of the eyelids, and we knew that her life's pendulum had not ceased to vibrate.

"Yes—I am—coming," she murmured—"the water's bride."

"No, Phyllis; no," I cried earnestly. "Dr. Tom has saved you for us, and for himself. Is it not so?"

She looked wonderingly at me—and then at him, and into her eyes came the light that only shines in one woman's eyes for one man.

Regardless of onlookers, he stooped and solemnly kissed the sweet lips, into which the color was slowly ebbing.

She had quite recovered, and we walked out in the morning sunshine to watch the carpenters repair the railing. I was thinking of the bracelet. She had not mentioned the ornament since that night, and Dr. Tom, in whom I confided his history, had advised letting her be the first to speak of it.

"It is curious papa," she said suddenly, "but that night as I stood there it seemed to me as if the ruby bracelet changed to a warm, clinging hand, which drew me over toward the water. I could hear the murmur of the falls above, and the echo seemed to say:

"The river's bride. The river's bride." Then the railing broke, and you know the rest."

"Yes, Phyllis," I said gravely, "I know that a good and true man saved you from a watery grave, and then by his skill resuscitated you. Perhaps the fastening of the bracelet was weakened with age. I am glad it is gone."

"I am glad it is gone," she repeated simply.

"You shall have a diamond one for your wedding present."

"Oh, papa, a potato patch would be more practical." And Phyllis gave such a ringing laugh—a laugh so contagious, so like her own sunny self—that in the happiness of her restoration, I forgave Dr. Tom for urging an early wedding.

YELLOW FEVER IN THE SOUTH

Thrilling Experiences With the Quarantine.

Dr. D. G. McLean writes to the Salinas Index the following account of his experiences while traveling through the south during the quarantine regulations which were so rigidly enforced while the yellow fever held sway in New Orleans and other places:

We then rolled on through Texas, stopping a while at San Antonio, which is a flourishing little city, with electric cars and the streets brilliantly illuminated with electricity, not equalled by any of our California cities. We left there at 10 p. m. and next morning were far down in Texas, near Louisiana, where we began to get an idea of the real workings of a yellow fever quarantine. No one was allowed to leave or get on our train. Then and there the question as to what was to become of us became decidedly interesting; but after several telegrams to New Orleans we were informed that there would be no trouble in passing through that city, so we proceeded on our journey.

Upon arriving at the Mississippi river all the windows and ventilators in our cars were tightly closed, the doors locked, and guards put on to keep them so. For twelve hours we were held in that closed car, where the heat was so intense that it seemed beyond human endurance. It seemed impossible to live through it, and all for fear a lurking mosquito might be hanging around a window.

When we reached the Alabama line we were informed, after all that precaution, that we could enter a "hell hole" or pay our way into Georgia or Tennessee, notwithstanding the fact that we had through tickets, and I was within twenty miles of my destination. I was ordered 200 miles away to wait ten days before I could enter Florida.

Only those who have had the privilege of riding through the grand, glorious and chivalrous state of Alabama, in a locked coach, with a large detachment of guards on duty to see that their prisoners did not force open the doors, climb through the transoms, jump out of the windows or scratch through the floors, or by any chance place their defiled feet on her pure and sacred soil while the train carrying its cargo of contamination was running at a high rate of speed through her matchless domain—only those, I say, can conceive of the magnitude of Georgia's chivalry and the confidence of her people in the immunity which her perfect cleanliness insures.

When within twenty miles of the Georgia line I was transferred to a different line going to Columbus, in Georgia, my ticket being to that point, as it was nearer to return. When I was transferred I was put in charge of a single officer, taken into the smoker as a common criminal, shown a seat and told not to change, while he took a seat back of me. As we crossed the line, the conductor, a kindly old gentleman, came to me and said, "You are in Georgia now." I grasped my grip, turned to my guard and invited him to that hot country whence no traveler returns, and walked into a different car, where I was a free man, and I felt like shouting a blessing on Georgia and her people. We reached Columbus at 12:30 p. m., more dead than alive.

Our dining car was left behind Friday forenoon, and as the eating stations were all closed, we did not have a mouthful to eat for thirty two hours, nor did we sleep a minute either for that length of time, nine hours of which was spent in that terrible sweat box and ten in a locked car. It is needless to say that I had a square meal and went to bed, but oh! it was hot.

Time dragged slowly for the ten days until the Florida quarantine permitted me to enter that state, and I reached home to find my old mother still alive, but scarcely able to recognize me.

People may laugh all they wish about California climate being sold by the acre; it is worth all that is asked for it. The boasted climate of Florida won't compare with the Sacramento or San Joaquin valley climate. Try it one week here and you will be convinced that California climate is worth more than the land.

After spending two weeks at home, I left Ponce de Leon for California. I had to go to Pensacola, on the southern coast of Florida to get my return ticket, which had to be endorsed there. Unfortunately for me, yellow fever was reported the very night previous to my intended start next morning. All trains were stopped and a general order made that no trains could leave the city. I was refused a passport or health certificate and ordered to remain in Pensacola, which order I did not obey, for the next night at nine o'clock on a side alley, about twenty of us boarded a gasoline launch previously chartered and took to the high seas, and at 8 o'clock next morning we were landed at a little town on the main land, ninety miles from Pensacola. Our arrival produced consternation, but as we only wanted teams to get out with they were soon furnished, and we left, but not until the telephone was called into use and the state health officers of Pensacola were notified. We were ordered to be arrested and returned, but our party promptly scattered in many directions and we were gone. I received a note next day from the major saying, "don't appear along line of railroad for ten days," and I am now awaiting another time limit. The hardships and impositions beggar description; everything is now under shotgun quarantine. Boats guard the sea and a cordon of men surrounds Pensacola.

I have been unable to get an orange in the state; old crop gone and new not in. Oysters are out of season, and I lose another treat. However, I did get to experience an old time thunder storm, which I was really anxious to see once more. The house was struck and thirteen holes knocked in it, but no one killed, but two inmates were thrown off their feet and badly blistered in several places, and again I wished for the glorious climate of California. Why people live here I can't imagine unless it is because they don't know any better.

When I return I will tell you how I got out. There are many dreadful incidents which I will not relate in this, but one instance I will mention of two trains that were to depart at 10 o'clock p. m. one to go east and the other north. About 7 o'clock two sure cases of yellow fever were discovered. My cousin heard of it and rushed to me with a hack to get me out before the quarantine was declared. We reached the depot, got tickets and with hundreds of others boarded the train. On time it moved into position as if to start. Business men had put their wives and children aboard to leave the city, and gone away. The trains did not move and at half past twelve everybody was ordered out of the cars. Between 300 and 400 women and little children were put on the sidewalks; and street cars had stopped running at midnight and all carriages and hacks had gone home. Mothers and children were crying and no provision was made for their protection or assistance. I found a belated negro with an old hack and reached my sister's home at 2 o'clock a. m., with my daughter Kate. What became of the rest of the crowd I don't know. I was again at the train at 6 a. m., but no train went. I was ordered to remain indefinitely, which I proceeded not to do.

THE FREE SCHOLARSHIPS:

The voting contest for the free scholarship in the Stockton Business College, and $100 in cash, as offered by the Ledger has developed no change of positions during the past week. Miss Mary Heath has assumed a strong lead, with nearly 2000 votes ahead of the next highest candidate. The contest will close in one month. There is still ample time to get in and do some effective work before the contest ends, and there is plenty of scope for those who are lagging behind in the race to make a victory showing on the home stretch. There are two free scholarships depending on the outcome, the second highest contestant receiving one, without any cash award behind it, however. The free scholarship alone is worth $65.

The vote now stands:
 Miss Mary Heath, Jackson 12,800 votes
 Lewis Love, Jackson - 10,825
 Jas Pengelly, Jr. Sutter Creek, 5300
 Francis Bryant, Ione - 3250
 William Grayce, Volcano - 250
 Elmer Dicken, Jackson - 250

When a community accepts taxes from a corporation, it must give its protection in return. Judgment has just been rendered against the city of Chicago for $100,000 damages which the Panhandle railroad claims to have suffered during the railroad strike of 1894, through the failure of the city to afford adequate protection to its property.—Acheson Globe.

The above affords food for thought to the people of Jackson in the present agitation for incorporation. In corporate, by all means, but beware against loading the city down with obligations that may prove a disastrous financial speculation in time to come.

We hope in the near future to be able to introduce an entirely new feature in the Ledger, giving our readers more reading matter, with neat and attractive illustrations, than any other journal in the county. This feature we hope to be able to introduce the present month.

The residents of Modesto are struggling with a municipal problem of their own. The proposition is before them to improve the streets. There are two ways in which this can be done. 1st, by issuing bonds, authorized by a two-thirds vote of the electors. 2nd, by assessing the work against the property owners on each side of the improved streets, each property holder paying one half of the cost of the improvements fronting his property. The Modesto Herald sums up the dilemma confronting them in another column.

The Corrupt Corporations.

Every big corporation is compelled to hire lobbyists to work among legislators. These lobbyists prevent legislation disastrous to the corporations. The conclusion is inevitable that the members of the legislature are paid money by representatives of the corporations. This money is blackmail, pure and simple. The legislators (some of them) introduce bills with a view of exacting blackmail, and the blackmail is paid. This is as well known around every state house as that legislature is in session. If the people let the corporations to quit sending lobbyists to state capitals, let the people quit electing legislators who are corrupt. It is all a wretched business, but the corporations are no more to blame than the people. Many of the bills introduced for blackmailing purposes are dishonest and unfair and intended to confiscate the property of corporations of great use to the people—Acheson Globe.

BEAT THE RAILROAD.

An Automobile Ride Against Time.

Mrs. Marie Zappitini, wife, of P. H. Zappitini, whose residence is in Oakland made a record breaking trip in an automobile last Saturday. In company with an expert driver, she started with her brother on that day for Volcano, on receipt of the end news that her father, John Mazzera, of Volcano, over 80 years of age, was night unto death, she made the trip in hope of greeting her aged parent before he breathed his last. The party reached here Sunday afternoon, where a conveyance awaited them to take Mrs. Zappitini and her brother Frank to Volcano. They reached there without mishap, and in time to greet their father alive. At last account Mr. Mazzera was still in the land of the living, attended by his loving daughter.

Suicide Caused by Illness.

An Oakland dispatch of Oct. 2nd, gives the following account of the suicide of a woman, whose girlhood days were spent in Jackson:

Mrs. Eliza Allard, 52 years of old, a widow, committed suicide to-day at her residence, 1685 Eighth street, by inhaling illuminating gas through a tube from the burner into her mouth. Olor of escaping gas attracted attention. The room was broken open and the woman was found dead.

Mrs. Allard had been a widow for many years. She was childless. Her home had been with F. Sciotte, her father. Her relatives said she had been in ill health for a long time and had been under a physician's care. Dependence over her condition is assigned as the cause of the suicide. Mrs. Allard was very deliberate in her preparations for death, having stuffed the cracks under the doors and windows with newspapers to try to keep the gas from escaping. Mrs. Allard was a native of Canada.

Deceased lived with her parents in Jackson, until they removed to Oakland some 20 years ago. She was here visiting about three months ago, the guest of Mrs. Rose Carley.

Dr. Aiken kindly furnishing the program, consisting of choice selections in variety on the talking machine. The Dr. has one of the latest improved instruments, and the music is of the high class order. It was a rare treat, and we extend unanimous vote of thanks to Dr. Aiken, with a wish that it may be repeated some time in the near future. The ladies aid served ice cream and coffee after. The proceeds are to be used in repairing the church steps, and other necessary improvements.

Always Successful.

When indigestion becomes chronic it is dangerous. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will cure indigestion and all troubles resulting therefrom, thus preventing Catarrh of the Stomach. Dr. Newburgh, of League, W. Va., says: "To those suffering from indigestion or sour stomach I would say there is no better remedy than Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I have prescribed it for a number of my patients with good success." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat and makes the stomach sweet. Sold at the City Pharmacy.

Indigestion Causes Catarrh of the Stomach.

For many years it has been supposed that Catarrh of the Stomach causes indigestion and dyspepsia, but the truth is exactly the opposite. Indigestion causes catarrh. Repeated attacks of indigestion inflame the mucous membranes lining the stomach and exposes the nerves of the stomach, thus causing the glands to secrete mucus instead of the juices of natural digestion. This is called Catarrh of the Stomach.

Kodol Dyspepsia Cure

relieves all inflammation of the mucous membranes lining the stomach, protects the nerves, and cures bad breath, sour risings, a sense of fullness after eating, indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach troubles.

F. Mann, discovered the supposed nugget was in reality a common piece of brass. Mr. Mann, who it is reported is a novice at prospecting, took the joke very well, and he declares that on future occasions while hunting the precious metal he will always bring along a small bottle of acid and thus avoid the trouble of packing good commercial brass, worth about 5 cents per pound to any junk peddler. ## INCORPORATION BOUNDARIES BEFORE SUPERVISORS.

Action Deferred Until Next Month.

The petition for the incorporation of Jackson, was presented to the board of supervisors at their meeting last Monday. In behalf of the petition and immediate action thereon, appeared J. W. Caldwell, who in the absence of A. Caminetti, represented the committee appointed at the mass meeting held September 26.

On the other side, representing the Zeila and other mining property included within the proposed city limits, was W. J. McTee, W. F. Detert was also present and protested against the inclusion of the mining property within the municipality. Mr. Detert said it was not because of the amount of taxes involved, that he was opposed to the mining property being taken in. He preferred to be under the control of the board of supervisors rather than the town trustees, and that without any reflection upon those who had been nominated for trustees. There were several reasons for wanting to remain within the jurisdiction of the supervisors. Some of the mining operations might be objected to as a nuisance. The burning of oil for fuel, and the fumes of the sulphurets works for instance. He had no objection to the small portion of the Zeila falling within the present townsite, remaining within the city limits, but he did object to the spirit which wanted to take in the entire mine, simply because of the revenue it would bring to the city treasury.

An effort was made to reach an agreement on the boundaries. The attorney of the petitioners expressed himself as willing to cut out most of the farming land—some 360 acres. This would reduce the area more than one-half, a tremendous concession from the original proposition of the more territory taken, the more revenue for the treasury and therefore a less tax rate. The sticking point, however, against an agreement was the desire to retain the Zeila within the corporate limits. They were not disposed to let the mine out.

Finally it was moved by John Strohm that the matter be laid over until next meeting, and the motion carried by a unanimous vote.

Fred Carlisle, who has been in the business of getting up dramas with local talent, arrived in Jackson Tuesday. He is contemplating giving a show here, two nights, sustained entirely with amateur artists. The benefit, if arrangements can be made, will be for some charitable or benevolent organization. He lately organized a two night's show on the same lines in Lodi, and scored a big success, financially and from an entertainment standpoint. He will probably select, "The Military Girl" as the drama.

The play was Virginia, melodrama, of the south. The acting was first class in every way, and it was conceded to be the best show given in Jackson for a long time. There will be another performance to-night also to-morrow night. Don't miss the opportunity to see a good theatrical troupe.

Marriage Bells.

The marriage of William Fessel and Miss Ruette Liversedge was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Liversedge, at Grass Valley, near Pine Grove, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 26th.

The house was elaborately and tastefully decorated, with masses of choice flowers and greens. In the front parlor where the ceremony was performed, the decorations were exceedingly pleasing, an arbor being formed of the trailing vines and dainty blossoms of the white clematis.

From the centre of the arbor was suspended a marriage bell of the same dainty blossoms. Over the walls the trailing vines were placed, and again banded upon and partly concealing the mantel, and arching over the doors. Opposite was a bank of La France roses, adding a touch of color and freighting the air with their fragrance.

At the hour of eight the bridal procession entered. The groom and his best man, A. C. McDonald, superintendent of the Mitchell mine, first entered the room; after them came the maid of honor, Miss Hilda Leak, alone, and finally the bride attended by Miss Lillie Bradshaw. The groom led his fair young bride beneath the marriage bell and the impressive ceremony which made two loving hearts but one, and joined for "better or for worse" was performed by the Rev. Jas. Drake, of Pine Grove, the members of the family forming a circle about the bridal party.

After the ceremony the usual congratulations were showered upon the happy couple, and then all retired to the dining room, where a sumptuous wedding supper was partaken of. This room was daintily decorated in bride's roses and trailing clematis. Fully an hour was spent in the enjoyment of the dainty menu.

The bride looked very pretty, in a gown of ecru taffeta; she wore no ornaments, a wreath of dainty white blossoms, adorning her head and she carried a shower bouquet of the same blossoms tied with long bows of white ribbon.

Only the immediate family witnessed the ceremony, but a reception was held from 9:30 until 12 o'clock. During these hours many friends of the young couple extended congratulations and enjoyed the music and refreshments.

The guests at their departure escorted, Mr. and Mrs. Fessel to their own cottage and amid showers of rice bade them adieu.

Thus it is our daughters leave us. Those we love and those that love us. Omega.

VICTORIA FALLS.

One of the Most Beautiful Spectacles
In the World.

There is a fine description of Victoria Falls in the Zambesi river in E. F. Knight's "South Africa After the War." The author says: "The nature of the extraordinary volcanic fissure that created the falls cannot easily be realized without reference to a map, but at the point under consideration the mighty Zambesi flows, roughly, from north to south. At about half a mile above the falls the river is a mile and a half in breadth. Then it contracts, and the breadth at the falls themselves is a little over a mile, or, to be exact, 1,935 yards. And here, to one looking over the edge, the great river seems suddenly to come to an end, no continuation of its channel being visible. The Zambesi for its whole mile of breadth thunders down precipitously into a comparatively narrow, profound trench or canyon, which extends at right angles to the river's course from shore to shore. Beyond the falls one is faced by the perpendicular wall of the canyon. Below the madly whirling spray obscures the view of the bottom of the canyon, and it seems as if the whole mighty flood were filling into the center of the earth through this awful chasm. But the river has its exit, a precipitous cleft, only ten yards in breadth, near the eastern end of the canyon, through which the whole of the contracted Zambesi rushes with incredible speed, fury and confusion, forming at this point what is called the Boiling Pot, surely one of the earth's most terrible scenes.

"I believe," the author adds, "that on that day I was gazing at one of the most beautiful spectacles of all this beautiful world. It was the lovely tenderness of the rich coloring, bathed in that translucent atmosphere of thin, pearly haze, rather than the awful majesty of the scene that impressed me. At our feet, far below, the raging flood thundered away down the canyon to the exit in the misty distance. On our left the line of the cataract, plunging into the swirling spray beneath, was clearly visible for some way out with its white avalanches and corrugating spray, and then gradually became less distinct in the thin haze until at last far off beyond Livingstone island it disappeared from our vision in the luminous pearl-like mist that formed the background to all the landscape.

"On our right, facing the cataract, loomed the 500 foot high wall of the canyon, topped by the lush green rain forest; with its ever dripping branches. And as we looked new wonders became gradually revealed to our wondering gaze. I began to perceive in nooks of the black precipices half-way down strange plants growing, as in happy confidence their fragile rainbow hued blossoms ever shaking in the wind and spray, but safe and unharmed amid this eternal storm. And down the black cliff wall on my right I saw hundreds of tiny white streamlets pouring, formed by the returning spray from rain forest. And as I watched them I discovered a strange thing.

"These falling streams never reach the bottom of the chasm. They dropped into little cascades to about a third of the way down, and then, as if defying the laws of gravity, they literally turned round and came back again, mounting vertically. It was curious to see these cascades, after breaking into spray, appear to hesitate and falter and then begin to rise, first slowly but soon rapidly, shooting upward in whirling foam columns and feathery fountains, being carried up by the fifts blasts of cold air that the dropping cataract forced out of the narrow chasm into which it thundered."

The Evil Spirit.

Envy is a universal characteristic of human nature. There are weak places in the strongest of human characters, and the weakness generally develops along the lines of jealousy or envy. Let a man be successful above the average in any particular calling, and he thereby becomes the target of the envious spirit. It matters not that the object of these malicious attacks is one of the main pillars of the temple of prosperity, and that to remove the pillar would mean the exchange of business prosperity for depression. Even the strong motive of self-interest is not proof against the indulgence of this jealous disposition.

The peculiarity of Jackson is not that this spirit should exist, but that it should be pandered to and encouraged by those who ought to know better. It is deplorable that appeals should be made to foster this weakness by degrading men who have expended money without stint in the development of the resources of this section, and who have made Jackson what it is to-day one of the most prosperous towns of its size in the state. The real enemies of any community are those engaged in this wretched warfare against the successful investors, whether the course is prompted by political or class hatred it matters not.

Who would exchange the merry noise of children at play, with the childless home where the old clock ticks in the dull silence? But there are a great many who would like to people the silent home with the children that fate has refused them. Fate is often in this case only another word for ignorance. Many a glad mother dates her happiness from the day she first began the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It often happens that with the return of female weakness and the establishing of the delicate womanly organs in sound health, the way is opened for the joy of motherhood. "Favorite Prescription" is a specific for the chronic ailments peculiar to women. It cures them perfectly and permanently.

No other medicine can do for women so much as "Favorite Prescription." Do not therefore let any other medicine be palmed off on you as "just as good."

"Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, opium, cocaine or other narcotic. It is a strictly a temperance medicine.

"I can truly say your medicine is a friend of mine," writes Mrs. Arthur Bratt, of Amherst, Ontario, Canada. "I am mother of four children and suffered greatly at times of birth of first three. When three months along with the last one I began to sink of trying some medicine to ease those terrible pains. I asked my doctor whether there was anything he could give me to lessen labor pains. He said there was nothing that could help me. I then thought I would write to Dr. Pierce. He advised me to take his Favorite Prescription. I started to take it at fourth month. I was very weak, and heart trouble and would faint away two or three times a day. I felt better every day. (Not along well as the time of delivery.) I delivered a healthy child and life was a drag. I would often say, oh, if I could only die in one of these spells, but I look now for myself and can not tell it plain enough. Your Favorite Prescription is the best medicine we ever knew. I advise my friends to try it. Baby is now four months old and is a strong healthy boy."

THE LITERARY FIELD.

Mrs. Ogden Colet has had made at enormous expense an edition de luxe of the manuscript of "Hyperion." The edition is limited to one copy and that copy will be placed in her library.

Miss Ethel Bret Harte, daughter of the famous writer of early California life, will devote herself to concert work because her father's estate at his death was too small to support his family.

A London publisher received the manuscript of a novel written, from beginning to end, in verse. Curious, he read it and found it not at all a bad story; so good, indeed, that he is willing to print it if the author will translate it into English prose.

A. E. Houseman, professor of Latin in the University college, London, is a writer of verses which have won praise from able critics. He consistently refuses to accept pay for his work. An American magazine recently printed fragments from a book he printed and sent him a check, which was returned with thanks.

Marie Corelli seems to find something amiss at home. She has noticed that "among the English upper classes there has been growing of late years a disregard for all that is truly sincere and honorable, and a callous frivolity to take its place." She further laments the disappearance of the sterling virtues of mental and moral stability and weight which were once the Englishman's pride.

The late Jules Verne relied chiefly on his reading and his imagination for the material for his stories. To prepare himself for his "Five Weeks in a Balloon" he made a single ascent lasting an hour. He wrote glowing descriptions of India and other remote countries, though his travels never took him beyond the Mediterranean regions. One of his favorite authors was Sterne, whose "Sentimental Journey" was the joy of his youth. Another favorite was James Fenimore Cooper, whose 30 volumes he read over and over again.

"Gyp" is the pseudonym of Sibylle Gabrielle Marie Antoinette De Riquetti De Mirabeau, Countess De Marle De Janville. "Gyp" is also known as "Bob." She writes and caricatures. Many dozen books has she written as "Gyp" and illustrated as "Bob." This remarkable woman is the grandniece of Mirabeau, orator of the French revolution, and was born in 1850. In 1888 she was married to Count De Marle. She first wrote for La Vie Parisienne and most of her novels have first appeared there. She is remarkable for the way in which she depicts society and has had many would-be imitators in New York. Her novels are witty but unfit for the family circle.

MITES OF MERRIMENT.

Mrs. Waunta Coyne—"The parrot talks all the time." Mr. Coyne—"Yes, but he never asks for money."

"Mrs. Watts Trumps didn't attend the last session of the whist club, did she?" "No; she can't talk very well yet with her new set of false teeth."

"No," said Mrs. Housekeep, "my husband is not at home. He's out hunting, as usual." "Hunting? Why, this is the close season!" "He's hunting a cook. That season is always open."

Growell (in cheap restaurant)—"Here, waiter! Are these mutton or pork chops?" Waiter—"Can't you tell by the taste?" "No." "Then what difference does it make what they are?"

Proprietor of Traveling Menagerie—"Are you used to looking after horses and other animals?" Applicant for Job—"Yessir. Been used to 'orses all my life." "What steps would you take if a lion got loose?" "Good long uns, mister!"

"All the room in a sleeping car appears to be occupied by the passengers," said the inquisitive of gentleman to the Pullman porter. "Where are your quarters?" "Well, suh, was the answer, "Ah tates 'em in a suit case ill we comes to de end ob de trip, an' den Ah invests 'em in real estate."
